

367th, 368th, 369th, 423rd Squadrons, and service organizations
Thurleigh, Bedfordshire, England – September 1942-April 1945

306TH BOMBARDMENT GROUP ASSOCIATION

Secretary/Historian

Russell A. Strong
2041 Hillside
Kalamazoo, MI 49007

6 May 1987

Author

First Over Germany

Editor

306th Echoes

Dear Mr. Andras:

In recently doing some searching for people who served with this bomb group, I had requested information on him through the Veterans' Administration, only to learn that he had died 30 September 1944.

As he was transferred from the 306th at the time he was injured, 31 December 1943, I had not located any further information about him.

Can you tell me as to where he died, and anything else you know of about the injuries which he received. In the history of the 306th which I wrote and published about five years ago, I state that he suffered a fractured skull in a crash landing near Stevenage, England. But that is the extent of my knowledge about him.

I would therefore appreciate any further information which you might be able to give me. I do not presently have in my possession the crew interrogation form from that date, which might be more revealing, but I am enclosing a copy of the squadron history for that day, which tells very little.

Your letter was addressed to you by the VA, and I do not have your address, so am dependent on you to contact me for any further exchange of information.

Sincerely yours,

Russell A. Strong

6 May 1987

Dear Mr. Andras:

In recently doing some searching for people who served with this bomb group, I had requested information on him through the Veterans' Administration, only to learn that he had died 30 September 1944.

As he was transferred from the 306th at the time he was injured, 31 December 1943, I had not located any further information about him.

Can you tell me as to where he died, and anything else you know of about the injuries which he received. In the history of the 306th which I wrote and published about five years ago, I state that he suffered a fractured skull in a crash landing near Stevenage, England. But that is the extent of my knowledge about him.

I would therefore appreciate any further information which you might be able to give me. I do not presently have in my possession the crew interrogation form from that date, which might be more revealing, but I am enclosing a copy of the squadron history for that day, which tells very little.

Your letter was addressed to you by the VA, and I do not have your address, so am dependent on you to contact me for any further exchange of information.

Sincerely yours,

Russell A. Strong