SUGGESTION BOX:

SUGGESTION: "In Group Headquarters there is an officers' latrine which to my belief is being very sadly neglected. As one who has to pass through the corridor and contend with the odor from this latrine, I think I am fully entitled to this 'Ditch'. It is not only unpleasant and unsanitary for those of us who come into daily contact with it but it must leave a definite impression with visitors who pass through our headquarters building. Can't something be done?"

ANSWER: Not unless the latrine is closed up entirely. Its not neglected as its cleaned daily. Its just that its the "honey bucket" type and its in a room with no ventilation except an air system that doesn't work too often. S.D. has taken this question up with the officers who use the latrine and they join you in your "Ditch". However, they don't offer a solution either.

In a further effort to answer this suggestion S.D. took the question to the "Base Oracle". He advised:

- a. Closing it up and using slit trenches like the real soldiers do.
- b. An early move to our new base which has brick headquarters with tile latrines.
- c. Going home.
